

UMRA FORUM

MARCH 2023

UMRA welcomes VP and Budget Director Julie Tonneson to luncheon forum at Midland Hills Country Club

UMRA is pleased to welcome Julie Tonneson, vice president and budget director for the University, to speak at our March 28 Luncheon Forum about the University's funding request for the next two years, which President Joan Gabel presented to the Minnesota House of Representatives Higher Education Finance and Policy Committee in early February.

The event will be our first in-person luncheon forum of the new year, and it will be held at a new location for UMRA: Midland Hills Country Club in Roseville. See page 3 for details of the location (including ample free parking), menu, and how to make your reservation.

Tonneson is one of the architects of the University's biennial funding request, and will talk with us about its goals and its prospects for success. She will also address the University's strategy and goals for obtaining funds from the state surpluses. This year is particularly important because the total of the structural surplus and one-time surplus was estimated, in November 2022, to be a record \$17.6 billion. A new forecast will occur at the end of February or the beginning of March, so we will have current numbers before the forum.

Many see the 2023 legislative session as an opportunity for the state to fund some new initiatives, correct some underfunding, and provide relief to taxpayers. As you might expect, the situation has brought forth many proposals from lots of programs and engendered a good deal of competition.

Tonneson is just the right person to speak on these subjects. She was recruited from the Minnesota Department of Finance, by the late University CFO Richard Pfutzenreuter, to manage and enhance the budget process. Luckily for the University, she has been here for more than 25 years and has dealt with virtually every school, college, and administrative unit on the details of their budgets. She is well known as the master of all budget numbers and admired for her calm and cooperative manner in dealing with the tough questions of University finance. Indeed, most regard her as the brains of the fiscal operation. She has made many CFOs look good. As Pfutzenreuter said, "she is pretty damn smart."

We look forward to hearing from Vice President Tonneson and thank her for bringing her experience and expertise to the UMRA Forum.

MARCH 21 LIVING WELL WORKSHOP

How to protect your finances from consumer scams and fraud

Marti DeLiema, PhD, an assistant professor in the School of Social Work, will share research on the latest trends in consumer scams and fraud for UMRA's March 21 Living Well Workshop via Zoom. Her talk will describe how fraud criminals use emotional arousal and other persuasion tactics to mislead consumers, and the recent methods they are using to deceive people into transferring money.

From the President

On being new

Soon after I joined UMRA, I went to my first luncheon forum at the Campus Club. I walked in and started looking for a seat. I saw one person I knew, but their table was full. I went to a table with some empty seats and was told those seats were saved. I went to another table, and yet another, same story. I felt like a total outsider and almost left.

Ron Matross

I did eventually find a place to sit, conversed with some pleasant strangers, and started coming to more luncheons. Now I know a lot of faces in the room, but I still wish my initial experience had been more comfortable. I share this story because welcoming newcomers has been on the minds of the UMRA Board and Program Committee.

From our membership survey last fall, we learned that having the kind of experience I did is a concern for a number of you. Fifty-five percent of those who had not attended an UMRA in-person event said that not knowing enough people was an obstacle to attendance, with 16 percent saying it's a major obstacle. Well, we ought to do something about that.

UMRA members are generally a pleasant and congenial lot, but we are working to become more welcoming. Our Host Team, led by Diane Young, is there to greet you at our in-person events when you walk in. If you're a new member, the hosts will connect you with someone who will introduce you to people and sit with you during the event.

A special invitation to newcomers

If you are a newcomer, I'd like to extend a special invitation to you to our March luncheon and forum, which will be held at the Midland Hills Country Club in Roseville. Please come a half hour early for a newcomer's reception, where several of us will greet you and help you get to know UMRA and the folks in it. Feel free to come even if you joined some time ago but have not been to our in-person events.

Also, give some thought to trying out one of our special interest groups. Their meetings and outings are small and friendly. The Photo Club and the Hiking Club would be happy to have you join one of their in-person events, regardless of your previous experience. Some of our other groups, like the Family History Interest Group, are meeting via Zoom but are still a place to connect in a smaller group.

The main purpose of joining most groups is to connect with the people in them. We hope that you'll try out an UMRA event, large or small, and we'll do our best to help you to make connections that make you want to come back.

—Ron Matross, UMRA president

Twelve members of the UMRA Hiking Club enjoyed spending time together outdoors on a glorious early February morning. It was a picture-perfect day for their hike from the Bakken Museum to the Lake Harriet Bandshell in southwest Minneapolis. See page 8 for information about the group's hike in March. Nominations sought for UMRA officers and board members

The 2023 UMRA Nominating Committee has begun its work to identify a slate of candidates for UMRA board members and officers. We invite you to nominate yourself or other members for election to these important positions in our organization. The committee will consider nominations and make recommendations to the current board at its March 27 meeting.

The members of UMRA will elect board members and officers at our annual meeting in May. We will elect up to four board members, each for a three-year term (2023–26, renewable); a treasurer and a secretary, each for a one-year term (renewable); and a president-elect, for a one-year term followed by one year as president and a third year as past-president. The president, treasurer, secretary, president-elect, past president, and URVC Council chair comprise the Executive Committee of the UMRA Board of Directors.

I'm pleased to lead the 2023 Nominating Committee with the following members appointed by the current board:

- Dale Blyth, UMRA member and professor emeritus, College of Education and Human Development
- Cathy Godlewski, UMRA member and retired Medical School administrator
- Eric Hockert, UMRA president-elect
- Russell Luepker, UMRA board member
- Jerry Rinehart, URVC Council chair
- Cathrine Wambach, UMRA board member
- Becky Yust, UMRA member and professor emerita, College of Design

Please send your nomination suggestions or questions to me at jam@umn.edu.

—Jan Morlock, UMRA past president and Nominating Committee chair

About Midland Hills

The “University of Minnesota Golf Course” opened for play in 1921, and soon became known for its rolling hills and fine putting surfaces. The preponderance of non-faculty members attracted to the course prompted a name change to Midland Hills Country Club in 1922.

From investigating insects to interpreting Shakespeare

UMRA's Professional Development Grants for Retirees (PDGR) program provides funding for University retirees to continue their scholarship or to pursue new projects. It is a competitive program, and this year UMRA is pleased to award more than $41,000 to fund nine new applications. The projects reflect the U's broad reach and span statewide and internationally.

Ferolyn Angell, retired lecturer in dance, University of Minnesota Morris, and now a three-time PDGR award recipient, will develop a live dance theater performance and film focusing on the refugee experience, based on writings of a refugee from Nazi Germany and interviews with immigrants and refugees in modern times.

Vicky Demos, professor emerita of sociology, Morris campus, will travel to Melbourne, Australia, to attend the XX World Congress of Sociology and deliver a paper, "Church, State, and Women's Rights in Greece from World War II to the End of the 20th Century."

UMRA member Marilyn DeLong, professor emerita, College of Design, will develop enhancements for a textbook which she co-authored for an undergraduate trends class. Student surveys of the class offered online during the pandemic provided positive evaluations and suggested refinements, to be developed with this grant.

Barbara Frey, former director of the College of Liberal Arts Human Rights Program, will record a series of 8 to 10 oral history video interviews for the new Minnesota Human Rights (MHR) Archive, highlighting narrators with Minnesota connections who have worked on racial justice, women's human rights, and anti-torture campaigns. Their stories will be used in the MHR Archive's fall 2023 inaugural exhibit.

Ralph Holzenthal, retired professor of entomology, in collaboration with Dr. Blanca Patricia Rios-Touma of Universidad de las Americas in Ecuador, will study caddisflies from Ecuador. Caddisflies are freshwater insects whose aquatic larvae are important to rivers and lakes, and are used as biological indicators of water quality. Information on caddisfly diversity can be used to support conservation of Ecuador's unique ecosystems.

UMRA member Michael Potegal, associate professor ad honorem of occupational therapy, plans to obtain statistical assistance in analyzing the temper tantrums of psychiatrically referred youth. The results would be clinically important because the progressive severity of tantrums may be associated with the general irritability and self-directed harm of the youth, their psychiatric diagnoses, degree of functional impairment in everyday life, and use of clinical services.

UMRA member and repeat PDGR awardee Wayne Potratz, professor emeritus, Department of Art, will use his grant to attend the 2023 National Conference on Contemporary Cast Iron Art at Sloss Furnaces National Historic Landmark in Birmingham, Alabama, where he will chair a panel, participate in another panel, and conduct a workshop, "Steelmaking Using the Brick Hybrid Tataru."

UMRA member Riv-Ellen Prell, professor emerita of American studies, will add an educational module to the website acampusdivided.umn.edu, to help users better understand the University's new building renaming process. The website was developed alongside the 2017 exhibition, "A Campus Divided: Progressives, Anticommunists, Racism, and Antisemitism at the University of Minnesota 1930-1942," whose research and curation Prell led.

UMRA member Madelon Sprengnether, Regents professor emerita of English, will explore how Shakespeare conveys the illusion of complex consciousness in dramatic form, and how his plays have influenced Western European ideas and attitudes (including those of Freud) about inwardness and individual self-consciousness.

The University of Minnesota Insect Collection is home to more than four million insect specimens. "Each specimen is like a little book chalked up with information," says 2022-23 PDGR grant recipient Ralph Holzenthal, retired director of the collection.

JOIE

You're invited to share your stories of retirement

The UMRA-sponsored Journal of Opinions, Ideas & Essays (JOIE) is an open access journal intended for a general audience. It provides a unique venue for articles—especially those written by UMRA members—that don't fit conventional professional journals. A wide variety of articles in JOIE currently includes a critique of Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn, a behind-the-scenes pictorial essay revealing the people and operations that make academic work possible at the University, the Civil War history of an ancestor, and even a play.

Many of us enjoy hearing the stories of others. With that thought in mind, we are inviting UMRA members to share their stories of personal experiences during retirement via a short essay (500–1,000 words). The stories will be combined into an anthology in JOIE.

Suggested topics: What surprised you about retirement? Have you tried new activities during retirement? How did the transition from work to retirement go for you?

Please email your essay to Kris Bettin at betti002@umn.edu by April 1. Submissions will be edited for length and clarity.

She will also summarize research on how cognitive aging presents unique risks for older adults, and how we can better support those who have experienced a scam. The webinar will conclude with information on how to better protect our finances from exploitation as we age.

An important component of aging well is avoiding financial abuse and fraud, yet victimization causes millions of Americans to become financially fragile in older age. Using both quantitative and qualitative research methods, DeLiema, an interdisciplinary gerontologist, studies financial victimization using focus groups, in-depth interviews, surveys, and panel data.

Marti DeLiema

She regularly collaborates with financial institutions, AARP, the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority Investor Education Foundation, and federal protection agencies to analyze victimization risk factors and to test efforts to inoculate consumers from fraud and abuse through enhanced consumer education.

Prior to joining the School of Social Work, DeLiema was a research scholar at the Stanford Center on Longevity. She earned her PhD from the USC School of Gerontology, where she conducted research on elder abuse and neglect in minoritized communities, evaluated outcomes of a multidisciplinary team's response to elder abuse, and analyzed the tactics scam artists use to deceive older adults.

HELLO, my name is Russell Luepker.

Hometown: I was born and raised on the south side of Chicago in a community called Roseland, where Barack Obama was later a community organizer.

When did you become a member of UMRA?

Two years ago.

What was your very first job? I worked as a stock boy for Alliance Leather Novelties on the west side of Chicago. My duties were many.

What was your occupation when you retired from FT work? I was Mayo Professor of Public Health. I was teaching two classes in clinical research and leading NIH studies. I also served on and chaired local, national, and international professional committees.

What inspired you to combine medicine and public health? My father died suddenly at age 51 due to hypertension. As I completed my training in cardiology, I decided to focus on hypertension at the population level. This combined medicine and epidemiology.

Describe a pivotal time or person who influenced the course of your career. I spent a year during medical school as an NIH research fellow in Sweden with Professor Edvard Varnauskas, head of cardiology at Göteborgs universitet. He taught me the scientific method. I was also fortunate to have Paul Yu, at the University of Rochester School of Medicine, Richard Warbasse at Johns Hopkins, and Eugene Braunwald at Harvard as mentors.

If you could learn a new skill, what would you like it to be? Or, if you were an Olympic athlete, what would you like your sport to be? I would like to speak a foreign language better. Basketball, a team sport.

Do you have a favorite place on the U of M campus? I like my office at WBOB [West Bank Office Building].

What is a fun fact about you we might not know? I have chartered sailboats around the world with friends from Tonga, Tahiti, New Zealand, Seychelles, Turkey, and many other places.

What is something you currently enjoy doing with your time? We now have our 17-year-old grandson living with us. Raising teens again.

Russell Luepker (far right) enjoys sailing with family and friends around the world and closer to home, as pictured here on the St. Croix.

CABINETS OF CURIOSITY

Wangensteen Historical Library of Biology and Medicine

Medical books and artifacts remind us of the amazing breakthroughs that benefit us in the 21st century. At the same time, many also remind of us of some surprising continuities in health challenges, like pandemics and endemic diseases.

Documenting this history is the goal of the Wangensteen Historical Library of Biology and Medicine. Somewhat hidden in the lower level of the Phillips-Wangensteen Building in the University of Minnesota Medical School complex, the library houses both tantalizing artifacts and rare volumes that date back more than half a millennia.

Strange instruments for bloodletting, advertisements for quack medicines, rare copies of books by Vesalius and other anatomical pioneers, and illustrated accounts of Japanese water cures are just a few examples of its more than 75,000 holdings.

If you're curious to know more, UMRA has arranged an exclusive behind-the-scenes visit to the library, including a meeting with long-time curator and collector Lois Hendrickson, from 1 to 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, March 8 (while the campus is quiet during Spring Break).

This will be the second in UMRA's new "Cabinets of Curiosity" series of visits to obscure and fascinating collections on the U of M campus.

Participation will be limited to 25. There is no fee for the outing, but advance registration is required. Go to z.umn.edu/curiosity-wangensteen to register online. There will be optional post-event conversation at the nearby Beacon Pub in the Graduate Hotel.

This is a wonderful opportunity to view, up close, rare manuscripts and books, to hear about their provenance, and to learn how these collections continue to support research, instruction, and outreach.

Questions? Contact Sally Gregory Kohlstedt at sgk@umn.edu or Jan Morlock at jam@umn.edu.

This rare book in the Wangensteen Historical Library collection was published by the Royal College of Physicians in 1665, the year an outbreak of the bubonic plague claimed 15 percent of the population of London.

BOOK NOTES

'Prof Notes: Wry Observations on Academic Life'

UMRA member and Professor Emerita Melissa Anderson has published a collection of five-line observations—peculiar, delightful, humorous and poignant—on academic life, based on her 36 years at the University. She finds insight in the tiny details as well as in the institution's grand gestures. In pithy, irreverent notes, she lets her deep affection for the academic world shine through, even as she calls attention to its absurdities.

"I received the book as a retirement gift, and it is very amusing. The observations are ones we have all experienced," says College of Design Professor Emerita and UMRA member Becky Yust.

Prof Notes: Wry Observations on Academic Life is widely available. Questions? Contact Melissa Anderson at mand@umn.edu.

FF Book Club to discuss Louise Erdrich's debut novel March 24

Love Medicine is Louise Erdrich's debut novel, first published in 1984 and revised and expanded in 1993 and 2009 editions. It follows five interconnected Ojibwe families living on fictional reservations in Minnesota and North Dakota and, for a time, in Minneapolis–St. Paul. There are several narrators, each reflecting various points of view that are often markedly different on the recital of similar events.

It is a story of love and survival, of the comic and the tragic.

Interested UMRA members are welcome to join the Fourth Friday Book Club meeting via Zoom from 2 to 3:30 p.m. on Friday, March 24. Contact Dorothy Marden at marden@umn.edu or Margaret Catambay at m-cata@umn.edu to learn more.

VOLUNTEER SPOTLIGHT

Finding purpose through volunteering

Jeanne Jacobson's job in high school, as a receptionist at Hastings Hospital, was more fortuitous than most first jobs. "The person who trained me was very excited to be heading off to nursing school," Jacobson recalled recently. That excitement rubbed off, and Jacobson ended up with a nursing degree.

She held many leadership positions at the University of Minnesota before her career took her to Fairview Southdale and, later, to a corporate position at HealthEast. She finished her professional life as the director of graduate studies in nursing at St. Kate's.

Jacobson was serving on many boards of directors at the time of her retirement, but turned to volunteering as a guardian ad litem, which she loved. "I met lots of wonderful families," she said. But the volunteer program was converted to a more formal, budgeted one.

Accustomed to being super busy, Jacobson felt she "needed to find something more fulfilling. I needed a purpose." She found the University of Minnesota Retirees Volunteer Center (URVC) website, and was attracted to volunteering with the Community Teachers for Health Professional Students program at the U.

Of all her volunteer experiences, Jeanne Jacobson says she especially finds satisfaction in seeing students learn and come to belong to their communities.

Jacobson corralled her husband into helping at the Wellstone Center Food Market, part of the nonprofit Neighborhood House in St. Paul, working with immigrants and refugees. That led to Jacobson's passion for working with ESL [English as a second language] students and the Tutoring in Your Community Program at Arlington Church, where she assists groups of students developing their language skills. In addition, she is working one-on-one with a student in the Reader/Writer Program at Franklin Middle School. Most recently, Jacobson started training with the International Institute of Minnesota to assist immigrants and refugees seeking U.S. citizenship.

"The number of possibilities URVC offers is wonderful!" Jacobson said. "You just figure out what works for you."

To learn more about volunteer opportunities available through URVC, please call 612-625-8016 or visit urvc.umn.edu where you can register to receive information related to your areas of interest.

UMRA member and explorer of Earth's interior honored with prestigious geology award

UMRA member David Kohlstedt, professor emeritus of earth and environmental sciences, has been awarded the 2023 Vetlesen Prize for his contributions to the discipline of earth science. Kohlstedt, who has been at the University since 1989 and was elected a member of the National Academy of Sciences in 2009, studied the physical properties of rocks and minerals, in particular, the mostly solid bulk of the Earth's interior, known as the mantle. Research from his laboratory has shown that even a miniscule amount of water in the rocks of the upper mantle, under very high pressure, may contribute to earthquakes and volcanic eruption.

The award is named for George Unger Vetlesen, who played a key role in the Norwegian resistance to the Nazis in World War II and later expanded shipping and air travel between Scandinavia and the United States. Generally regarded as the "Nobel Prize for geology," the Vetlesen Prize is awarded every three years, with this year's award ceremony scheduled for April at Columbia University in New York City.
